While Anti-Betting Law Hurts the Game It Will Not Kill

It. New York, May 14 .- The opinion among the many followers of horse racing who witnessed the opening of the season at Belmont park yesterday is that the sport will continue under certain conditions.

The fact that bets were made and will continue to be made by those who are krown to be professional bookmakers plays smail part in the prediction of sporting men. If the sport is to depend solely upon the betting feature it will not succeed under the anti-betting law. Still according to many prominent followers of the race horse. This is because only those who are personally known can make a bet, and they are comparatively few when a crowd of many thousands is considered.
